

Somie Shrestha [12]

This year at IA several students spent time with family at home, or went out with friends this summer break. However some students went out and started to professionally develop themselves like IA Beacon student of the week, Somie Shrestha,

IA Senior Somie Shrestha spent her summer break doing a neuro science internship in Washington D.C. spending time with fellow IA students and those from in and out of the country. She spent a vast amount of time learning from industry professionals and mentors. Working on projects with her peers to create solutions for possible problems in the industry. Consulting professionals and experienced students along the way. “Honestly, I had a lot of fun working with those from across the countries, some even out of state” she said. Somie would go on to work with people across the United States to create their presentation and present it to all the other interns. “It was probably the best experience I had in my life, would definitely do it again.”

Shrestha performing mock surgery

Shrestha having a mock IV done on her

